Executive Function Skills: Foster with Play

Executive function skills are a broad set of skills that support the process of thinking and learning. Current research shows the importance of executive function skills as critical building blocks in learning and as predictors of school achievement. Early childhood foster play is a critical role in promoting executive function skills. How? Think play. Complex and intentional play, such as dramatic play and partner play, can be the spotlight to building many executive function skills to be practiced and mastered.
